Subaltern Positioning: German Zionism in the Field of Nationalism in Germany, 1890-1933

Dr. Stefan Vogt

Goethe University Frankfurt/Main

Stefan Vogt is research associate at the Martin Buber Chair for Jewish Thought and Philosophy and private lecturer for Modern History at the Department of History of Goethe University Frankfurt am Main. He received his Ph.D. from the Free University Berlin and has previously worked at the University of Amsterdam, at New York University and at Ben-Gurion University of the Negev. Besides his book Subalterne Positionierungen he has published widely on the history of Zionism, German-Jewish history and the history of nationalism.

In this lecture, he will present his new book Subalterne Positionierungen: Der deutsche Zionismus im Feld des Nationalismus in Deutschland, 1890-1933, which investigates the relationship between German Zionism and German nationalism. German Zionism represented only a small part of the world Zionist movement, but was nevertheless one of the organizational and intellectual centers of the movement. It was characterized by a particularly pronounced tension between an affinity to the ideology of German nationalism, including its radical and even völkisch versions, and an inclination towards exceptionally moderate national politics.
