Leo Strauss: A Man of Peace

Prof. Robert Howse

School of Law, New York University

Robert Howse is a professor at the New York University School of Law, where he serves on the advisory board of the Center for Law and Philosophy. His new book, Leo Strauss Man of Peace, has been called "bold and admirable" by the Los Angeles Review of Books, and "distinct and original" by Notre Dame Philosophical Reviews. Countering the popular perception of the German-Jewish emigre philosopher as a warmonger, Howse traces Strauss's complex intellectual journey from the political and intellectual polarization of the Weimar Republic, to the diagnosis during World War II (as an exile at the New School in NY) of "German nihilism" as a pathology of thought that contributed to Nazism, to Strauss's much misunderstood mature works on thinkers such as Machiavelli and Thucydides.
